EDITORIAL & LEADERSHIP

September was a month of ideas in action at King Ceasor University. Across the University, students and staff participated in activities that demonstrated how knowledge, creativity and practical skills can translate into opportunities and meaningful impact.

This edition, under the theme "Entrepreneurship & Innovation Ecosystem," captures that spirit through stories of research achievement, digital and creative skills development, practical competitions, industry engagement and entrepreneurship. It also highlights the University's growing connections with communities and institutions through health outreach, environmental action, career guidance and strategic partnerships.

From the Next Creata Bootcamp and ICT Week to conversations on cooperatives and wealth creation, the stories featured in this issue show that innovation takes many forms. It can begin with a research idea, a new skill, a partnership or simply a different way of approaching a challenge.

Beyond individual activities, September also reminds us that a strong innovation ecosystem is built through connection. When students, academics, industry partners and communities exchange knowledge and experiences, ideas gain the support they need to grow into practical solutions. Creating these spaces for collaboration is essential to nurturing graduates who can recognise opportunities, respond to emerging challenges and contribute meaningfully to society.

We hope this edition offers a glimpse into a vibrant KCU community that continues to learn, create, collaborate and make an impact

Vice Chancellor's Note

It is my pleasure to welcome you to the September edition of the King Ceasor University Monthly Journal, published under the theme, "Entrepreneurship & Innovation Ecosystem."

At King Ceasor University, we recognise that universities have an important role in preparing students not only for employment, but also to become innovators, problem-solvers and creators of opportunities. Entrepreneurship and innovation enable our students and staff to transform knowledge and ideas into practical solutions that respond to the needs of society.

Throughout September, the University community participated in activities that demonstrated this commitment. Our ICT Week promoted digital skills and technological awareness, while the Next Creata Bootcamp equipped young women with practical skills in content creation, graphic design, video production and social media management. The University-Wide Public Lecture on cooperatives also challenged students and staff to think beyond traditional employment and explore collective enterprise, saving and investment as pathways to sustainable wealth creation.

We were equally proud to see KCU represented in research, innovation and professional engagements beyond the University. Recognition at the Busitema University Science, Technology and Innovation Symposium demonstrated the value of research in developing solutions to contemporary challenges.

As we strengthen our entrepreneurship and innovation ecosystem, I encourage students and staff to remain curious, identify opportunities, develop new ideas and seek meaningful partnerships. Innovation begins with the willingness to question, experiment and turn knowledge into action.

Together, we are building a culture where ideas are nurtured into solutions that create lasting impact.

I invite you to explore this edition and discover how the KCU community continues to learn, innovate, serve and create opportunities that contribute to our university and society.

Dr. Charity Basaza Mulenga
Vice Chancellor.

FEATURE STORY

Beyond Employment: Cooperatives as a Pathway to Wealth Creation

King Ceasor University students and staff attending the University-Wide Public Lecture on cooperatives, held on 25 September 2026.

As universities prepare graduates for an increasingly competitive economic environment, an important question is emerging: should higher education prepare young people only to seek employment, or should it also equip them to create opportunities and build sustainable wealth?

This question was at the centre of the University-Wide Public Lecture hosted by King Ceasor University on 25 September 2026 under the theme, "Beyond Employment: Can Cooperatives Turn University Students and Staff into Wealth Creators?"

The lecture brought together students, staff and officials from the Ministry of Trade, Industry and Cooperatives to explore the potential of cooperatives as platforms for saving, investment, enterprise and collective economic empowerment.

Delivering the keynote address, Mr. Ochatum Joseph Paul, Principal Cooperative Officer at the Ministry of Trade, Industry and Cooperatives, highlighted principles that underpin successful cooperatives, including member economic participation, autonomy and independence, democratic participation, and cooperation among cooperatives. He encouraged participants to consider collective action as an alternative pathway to economic opportunity beyond traditional employment.

Ms. Hamega Miria, Senior Cooperative Officer, turned attention to governance, emphasising that sustainable cooperatives require strong structures, accountability and active participation from their members. She highlighted the Annual General Meeting as the highest decision-making organ and discussed the role of committees in effective cooperative management.

The discussion demonstrated that entrepreneurship does not always have to begin with an individual business venture. Through cooperatives, individuals can pool resources, share knowledge, invest collectively and pursue opportunities that may be difficult to achieve independently.

For university students and staff, this presents an opportunity to think differently about wealth creation. Skills and knowledge acquired through education can be combined with cooperation, saving and investment to create sustainable economic opportunities.

The lecture therefore went beyond a conversation about cooperatives. It challenged the University community to rethink the relationship between education, employment and entrepreneurship and to consider how collective enterprise can form part of a stronger entrepreneurship and innovation ecosystem.

STUDENT LEADERSHIP & CAMPUS ENGAGEMENT

KCU Strengthens Student Leadership Through Capacity-Building Training

King Ceasor University, through the Office of the Dean of Students, conducted a leadership training for Guild leaders and chairpersons of student associations on Saturday, 5 September 2026, at the University Main Campus.

The training was organised to strengthen the participants' leadership abilities and enhance effective student representation. It equipped the student leaders with practical knowledge to support responsible decision-making, effective communication, teamwork and cooperation within the University community.

The engagement also reinforced the important role student leaders play in representing their colleagues' interests, promoting student welfare and between students and the University administration.

Through such capacity-building initiatives, KCU continues to nurture responsible, competent and service-oriented student leaders who can contribute positively to institutional development and the wider community.

Medical students from King Ceasor University, through the King Ceasor Anatomy and Surgery Society, participated in the 2026 Buganda Sub-Region Surgical Camp, organised by the Association of Surgeons of Uganda. From 12–18 September 2026, the students volunteered as data clerks across five health facilities, supporting documentation and the coordination of surgical services while gaining firsthand exposure to healthcare delivery in a community setting. The camp provided an opportunity to connect classroom learning with real-world surgical outreach. Working alongside surgeons and other healthcare professionals, the students experienced multidisciplinary teamwork, patient-centred service and the coordination required to deliver surgical care effectively. Their roles also highlighted the importance of accurate health information in supporting clinical decision-making and continuity of care. Beyond their assigned responsibilities, the students contributed to a wider effort to bring essential surgical services closer to communities. Their participation reflected a commitment to service and gave them a deeper appreciation of the role medical professionals play in responding to community health needs.

Library Week Strengthens Information Skills for Academic Excellence

Assistant Librarian Mrs. Sarah Nakayima facilitates a session during KCU Library Week, guiding students on library services and effective use of academic information resources.

King Ceasor University held its Library Week from 21–25 September 2026 under the theme, "Beyond Access: Building Information Skills for Academic Excellence." The week equipped students with practical skills for accessing, evaluating and effectively using academic information. Activities included orientation on library services, registration on KOHA and MyLOFT, hands-on e-resource search and retrieval, evaluation of information sources, and sessions on copyright and academic honesty.

Students also explored the KCU Institutional Repository and participated in book exhibitions and interactive question-and-answer sessions. The week concluded with recognition of top library users and key Library Peer Mentors, reinforcing the library's role in supporting research, learning and academic excellence at KCU.

ALUMNI SPOTLIGHT

From Student to Professional: Mugisha Brian's KCU Journey

Mugisha Brian

When Mugisha Brian first walked through the gates of King Ceasor University, he carried big dreams and a determination to build a meaningful future. His studies in the Bachelor of Business Administration (BBA) programme helped turn those ambitions into direction, confidence and purpose.

Through academic mentorship and practical learning, Brian was challenged to think beyond conventional business approaches, identify opportunities and develop innovative solutions to real-world challenges. The experience strengthened his strategic thinking and equipped him with an adaptable, growth-oriented mindset.

After graduating with First Class Honours in 2025, Brian joined King Ceasor University as a Teaching Assistant in the Department of Management Sciences, School of Law. In this role, he applies the knowledge and skills gained during his studies while contributing to teaching, learning and the wider academic community.

Your KCU Story Continues

Graduation may mark the end of your studies, but it does not mark the end of your connection with KCU. Once part of KCU, always part of the KCU community.

Like Brian, every alumnus has a story worth sharing and experience worth passing on. Where has life taken you since graduation? What milestones have you achieved? What lessons could inspire a current student or fellow graduate?

We invite our alumni to reconnect with KCU, share their success stories, mentor students, open doors to internships and career opportunities, build professional partnerships, and participate in university activities. Your knowledge, networks and experiences can help strengthen the community that helped shape you.

Come back. Connect. Share. Mentor. Create opportunities.

We invite all KCU alumni to share their journeys, achievements and experiences with us. Whether you are building a career, pursuing further studies, leading a business or making an impact in your community, your story can inspire current students and fellow alumni. Let us celebrate where KCU graduates are today and the difference they continue to make.

Your KCU story did not end at graduation. it simply entered a new chapter. Let's continue writing it together.
